PRINCIPAL MURPHY, OF BROOKLYN, CHARGED WITH ABUSING A PUPIL.

The Boy Wouldn't Hold Out His Hand and the Blows Fell on His Legs—Prosecution in Police Court and Civil Courts Threatened for the Teacher—Stories Told on Two Sides of the Case.

Principal Thomas D. Murphy, of Public School No. 30, Brooklyn, which is located in Walcott street, near Van Brunt, was arraigned in Justice Massey's Police Court this morning on the charge of cruelly beating and assaulting David Burnside, eleven years old, one of his pupils, who lives at 102 Tremont street.

He had been arrested by Policeman Reilly, of the Third Precinct, on a warrant issued by Judge Massey, on the complaint of Forrester Burnside, the boy's father, who claims that his son was unjustly and brutally punished by the Principal without sufficient cause.

Both the defendant and his accuser were in court this morning, but the former, not being accompanied by counsel, asked for an examination and an adjournment, which were granted him, and the case was set down for next Saturday. Meanwhile Mr. Murphy was allowed to go on his own recognizance.

Principal Murphy, who is a tall and robust young man, is about thirty-six years old. He wears a full brown beard and his expression is neither cruel nor bloodthirsty.

"The boy," he said to a reporter of The Evening World, "was a pupil in the first class of the primary department. He was never reported for misconduct to me before last Thursday. On that day, in the morning, Miss Gilvary, his teacher, sent him to me with a note saying that he had been playing and disturbing the class and would not mind her orders. I kept him in my room, after reprimanding him, till noon, and then sent him back to his class."

About 2 o'clock he was sent to me again on the same complaint, and I decided at once to punish him.

Mr. Murphy here produced a copy of the rules and by-laws of the Brooklyn Board of Education, and called attention to the rule which provides for corporal punishment. It reads:

"The discipline to be maintained in the schools shall be of a mild and parental character, and corporal punishment shall be resorted to only in cases of persistent misconduct and after failure of all other reasonable efforts at reformation. Only the Principal of the school shall be authorized to inflict corporal punishment, and for the purpose for which he shall, in every case, be the judge."

"Do you think corporal punishment was warranted in this case?" the Principal was asked.

"Certainly," he replied, "and I am prepared to back up my claim that I acted entirely within the authority given me by the law. As soon as I saw that the boy was not taking the boy out into the hall and told him to hold out his hand."

"He refused to obey, and I whacked him across the legs with the ruler," he continued, "and he kept on crying and striking me each time on the legs, after waiting a reasonable time for him to obey."

"After the third time he started for the stairs and to get away, but I grasped him by the collar and brought him back. The collar came off, but his clothing was not torn."

"Finally he held out his hand and I struck him twice, and then I took him into the school room. When he got near the other pupils he said out loud, so that the rest could hear him, 'You'll see.'"

"I took him out into the hall again and struck him once more on the hand. Then I made him sit on the platform till 3 o'clock, when I dismissed him, and he went home. He did not seem to be hurt at all, and I do not think that I acted out of the line of my duty or inflicted unnecessary punishment."

Principal Murphy said that he was the son of a lawyer, and that he was the first in his family to be a teacher. He was very much surprised when he was charged with abusing a pupil, and he was very much surprised when he was charged with abusing a pupil.

a family of ten children, all of whom have been educated in the public schools of this city, says that he would prefer to know of his children's bad conduct, and punish them himself. In New York he always got a letter. Davis had been to the King street school here, and had always had a good record for deportment.

The marks of the beating he received are still plainly visible and on both legs there are black and blue patches, which look as if they might have been made with a brickbat. Mr. Burnside says he will prosecute Mr. Murphy in the civil courts.
